A Reminder of Other Days

A youngish man, apparently accustomed to manual labor, passed up lower Broadway, and many persons turned to gaze after him. His Derby was tilted well over his right ear, and his rim was well down over his right eye. A cigar, held at the extreme side of his mouth, was elevated at an angle of 45 degrees toward the right eye of the overhanging hat rim. The general effect was more than rakish; it was peculiarly "tough."

"That chap is not a New Yorker, and he's trying to look like what he thinks a New Yorker ought to look like," was the comment of an onlooker. "He's a quarter of a century behind the times and the result is that he's a marked man—the very thing he imagines he's avoiding."

"A generation ago the 'sporty' man, the street corner idler, the Bowery denizen, and all who aimed to be regarded as a trifle 'fast,' bore themselves as that man does. It was a species of trade-mark. But time has wrought a change. There is no longer anything outwardly distinctive about these local characters. In dress and bearing they are as other citizens. Yet this passing of a once famous type has been so gradual that it is realized only when an uninformed stranger within our gates makes a show of himself, as that man is doing."—New York Globe.
